Language of Math

Learn about fractions. Then tell what number is the numerator and what number is the denominator in the fraction.

Word Bank:

\[
\frac{10}{18} \rightarrow \text{numerator} \quad \frac{1}{2} \quad \frac{3}{4} \quad \text{denominator} \quad \frac{1}{4}
\]

One whole (1/1)

Example: The numerator in $\frac{1}{2}$ is 1. The denominator in $\frac{1}{2}$ is 2.

Now you try: The numerator in $\frac{1}{4}$ is _____. The denominator in $\frac{1}{4}$ is _____.
The _____ in ___ is ______. The _____ in ___ is _____.

Challenge:
Draw a picture to show $\frac{1}{5}$.
What fraction do the pictures below show? The numerator is the piece that is shaded.

Language of ELA

Tell what is happening in the pictures.

Word Bank:

Bowl  Spoon  Box of Cereal  Milk  Pour  Eat

Word Bank:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>10</th>
<th>numerador</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>denominador</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Un entero (4/4)

Ejemplo: El numerador en ½ es 1. El denominador en ½ es 2.

Ahora inténtalo tú:
El numerador en ¼ es _____. El denominador en ¼ es _____.
El _______ en ____ es ______. El ______ en ____ es ______.

Reto:

Ceremonial Teahouse: Sunkaraku

Imagine that you are a guest at this Japanese teahouse set in a tranquil garden. Before the tea ceremony begins, you wait in the building on the right to quietly prepare for the ritual. After a signal from the host, you walk slowly along the stone path to a mossy stone basin and wash your face and hands. Before entering the teahouse, you must remove your shoes and bow, then crawl through a small door. Its low height is meant to remind you and the other guests to enter the tearoom and the ceremony with humility and respect. Once inside, you may notice that there are no chairs. Instead, there are three tatami (mats made of rice-plant straw) on the floor. The entire teahouse is made from natural materials such as cedar and bamboo, creating a sense of harmony with nature. A branch of Japanese evergreen extends along the half wall inside the house as a reminder of what grew there before.

The Japanese tea ceremony engages all five senses: you can smell the woodsy scent of the surrounding garden, hear the wind in the trees outside, feel the teabowl and chakin (napkin) in your hands, see a beautiful painting or ceramic pot in the tokonoma (alcove), and taste the hot green tea and sweets. During this detailed and elegant ritual, each movement is performed with careful attention to four spiritual qualities: respect (kei), harmony (wa), purity (sei), and tranquility (jaku). With these in mind, the tea ceremony becomes a contemplative, calming experience.
